

Miscellaneous Professional Liability Insurance for Business Process Administrators

CHUBB®

In outsourcing business process functions to administrative firms such as yours, your clients are shifting more than just expenses off of their balance sheets - they are also sharing certain legal liabilities. Your clients expect your company to meet your service obligations and comply with applicable regulations. If those expectations are not met, allegations may be brought against your company for perceived errors made in the course of performing professional services or the failure to maintain your client's compliance with any applicable legal requirements. Any organization or person who believes they were negatively impacted by these errors or failure, including your client's employees and other third parties, may seek to recover losses through litigation.

Even if no one in your company is at fault, defense and settlement costs can quickly add up. Fortunately, Chubb offers Miscellaneous Professional Liability (MPL) insurance to a variety of service providers, including business process administrators. Chubb's MPL coverage can be tailored to the specific set of services your company provides, including:

- Human resource administration
- Bookkeeping
- Customer service center management
- Product and order fulfillment
- Document management

Claims Scenarios

A client sued a bookkeeper alleging the bookkeeper was negligent in reviewing and reconciling monthly bank statements and, accordingly, failed to detect the fraudulent behavior of a dishonest employee. The client sued for the value of the theft in excess of the funds recovered through the client's fidelity insurance and from the dishonest employee.

A client company sued a bookkeeper after a misunderstanding about the scope of services the bookkeeper was engaged to perform. The misunderstanding caused the client to miss tax filing deadlines and incur penalties. The client demanded reimbursement for the penalties and additional expenses associated with the late filings.

A distributor hired a call center to prescreen potential sales leads with introductory calls and provide aggregated lead counts by geographic region. Initial reports contained errors in the aggregate data, overstating leads in some regions and understating leads in others. The call center eventually discovered and corrected the errors, but the distributor alleged that the errors increased its internal costs, forcing it to adjust inventory and sales staff levels. The distributor demanded reimbursement from the call center for the additional expenses.

An appliance manufacturer recalled a component in a series of appliances. The manufacturer hired a call center to handle incoming calls from consumers and schedule service appointments to replace the faulty part. After the manufacturer changed the notification process, the call center received a much higher volume of calls than anticipated. The manufacturer alleged that the call center did not meet its customer service standards and, as a result, the manufacturer's reputation was damaged. The manufacturer demanded compensation from the call center for expenses incurred in launching a public relations campaign.

In the News: Allegations against Business Process Administrators

- A class-action lawsuit was brought against a retailer alleging it miscalculated the amount of sales tax on returned items, in essence under-refunding customers for their returns. The retailer in turn sued the administrator it had paid to manage the refund system for breach of contract.
- Thousands of landowners brought suit against an energy company, alleging it had miscalculated royalties due and improperly withheld management fees from royalties. The energy company then terminated its royalty payments administrator and sued it to collect its losses.
